The majority of children in foster care return home to their parents; sometimes, however, children cannot safely go home and permanent families need to be found. DCF first looks to relatives, family friends, and foster parents to provide permanency for children who cannot go home. Sometimes, however, adoptive families need to be found. Most of the waiting children are school-aged and many have special needs related to the abuse or neglect they've experienced. Some are part of a group of siblings who would like to stay together.
